

AN IN-HOUSE ADMISSION OF HOW THE LSE CORRUPTS

The London School of Economics internal magazine claims that they are "shaping tomorrow's leaders". That is exactly what communist-led universities like the L.S.E. and Oxford have done for many decades. Many of those currently in control of Western governments learnt their politically- correct nation-wrecking policies while students at university. It is all so beautifully simple, if you think about it. From among today's university students will come, future political leaders. If students are caught at a time when they are young and naive, with no political knowledge or awareness, they can easily be brainwashed into joining subversive organisations, as long as these give the impression of being well-meaning. However, the nation-wrecking programme that Marxists and internationalists promote, were devised by incredibly wealthy groups that are never seen.

The 1960's saw violent student action aimed at undermining the forces of law and order. However, more recently, the same students have had far more success in bringing about the ruination of the police force, since they have been allowed to take a leading role in Parliament and the administrative buildings in Whitehall.

More than 200 revolutionaries from around the world were invited to give lectures on subversive techniques at the London School of Economics during the summer of 1968. Those invited to a conference were expected to subscribe to "Marxist control of education ", as well as "oppose imperialism." (This was a euphemism for disinheriting the white man and sending third-world inhabitants back to the stone-age.) They supported all left-wing terrorist organisations and opposed racialism (in this they sought to bring an end to the white-mans racial and cultural identity) For this reason they also to a man opposed any form of immigration control.

Marshal Bloom, an American Jew, was a well known militant student activist in the anti-Vietnam war rallies. In the big anti-war demonstration held in Grosvenor Square, during March 1968, over 100 policemen were injured. Bloom was producing a journal called "The Amehurst Student." At the time he became President of the LSE. The public's silence over the Viet Nam war allowed students to gain an easy advantage.

How Marxist-trained students were organised to demonstrate in favour of revolution and attack all forms of pro-British activity.

During the nineteenth century several sinister groups set out to dominate all the nations of the world and take control of the earth's valuable resources. Such a long-term plan could never be carried out if the conspirators were to become leaders. For when things got worse, as they surely would, they would be kicked out never to return. So instead, they use puppet world leaders to act as paid agents for them. We must all be aware how western governments have been packed with such people. To fulfil their plan for world domination the power-hungry, have used their army of revolutionaries to create anarchy, dissent, division, violence and civil unrest. This seemingly odd behaviour is carried out in the belief that the public will blame the puppets and their parties for the breakdown in society. The power-hungry plotters, when the time comes, hope to stand unrecognised, tut-tutting on the sidelines trying to persuade us that they would be a better alternative. Despite using the word "democracy" with gay abandon, anti-nationalists do not intend, if possible, to allow anyone but themselves to gain ultimate control.
